

NEW YORK VOICES A MIGHTY "HAIL AND FAREWELL"

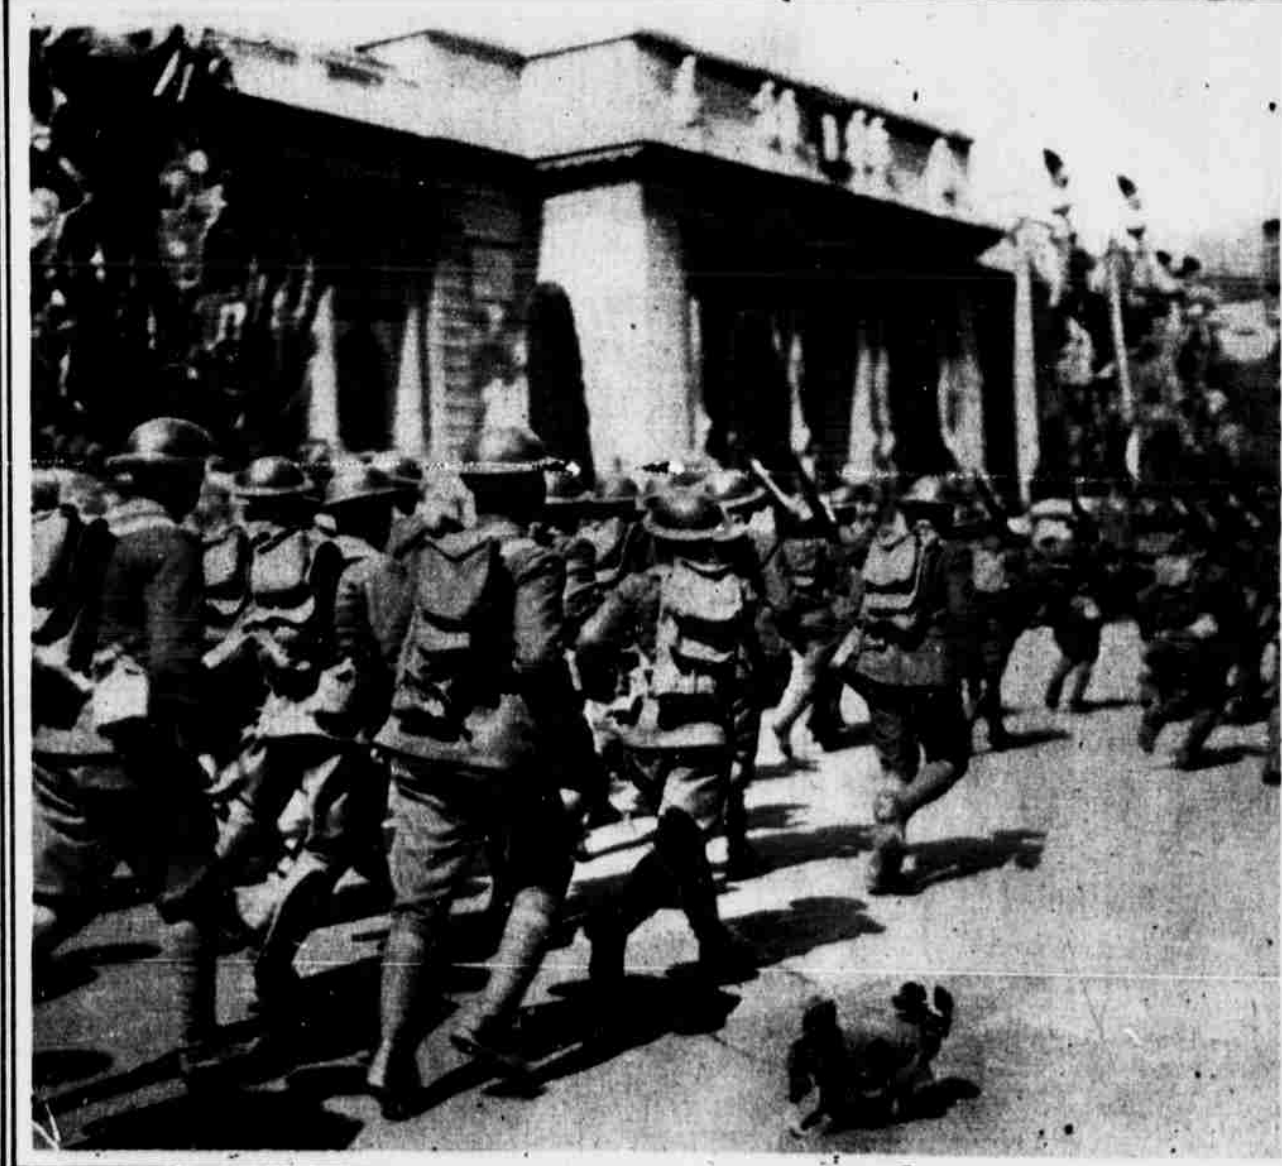

Cheering crowds at every foot of the way cheer for the men, cheers for their leaders, cheers for the deeds of both. Time and again they broke through police lines to tell the men of Kemmel Hill of their joy at the safe return and the glorious record. Here is a section of the throng as Gen. O'Ryan rode by.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

The automobile loads of the 27th's wounded passing the reviewing stand at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and receiving a stand-up ovation from the spectators. The wounded formed the division's own vanguard in the line of march. The West Point cadets are drawn up in two ranks on the opposite curb.

Photo, International Film.

Passing the Public Library "on the double." With rifles at a different angle, and bayonets fixed, they must have looked much like this at Vierstaat Ridge. Notice the mascot's two service stripes.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

These welcomers aren't losing sleep over the danger of not getting a good place. They have it—at 5:30 A. M. One of many such scenes which dawn uncovered on Fifth avenue.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.